FOREWORD

This pamphlet has been compiled at the suggestion of Miss M. A. Newberry, Director of the Library Training Department, Board of Education, Toledo, Ohio, and on the approval of her suggestion by others engaged in teaching the use of library and reference tools to teachers, students and future librarians. It is designed to present in more convenient text-book form the materials for teaching the use of the Wilson Company publications, formerly supplied in the form of sample copies of the indexes and descriptive circulars, and to be put into the student's hands as a text.

The pamphlet contains first of all a description of The H. W. Wilson Company, its history and methods of work. The cumulative feature, a distinctive feature of all the Wilson current indexes, is illustrated by a "Plan of Cumulation." For each publication is given a page of description, limited to the essential features, three pages taken from a recent cumulation (the three pages for each publication have been taken from the same parts of the alphabet to allow for comparison), and a blank page for notes. The information given can be supplemented as desired by copies of the publications or descriptive circulars, especially for the miscellaneous publications of the Company of which no mention is made here. Copies of the Wilson Bulletin which contains the full catalog of publications, sample copies or descriptive circulars will be sent as desired.

A comparison of the three pages chosen for each index will bring out the fact that the specialized indexes often have much material on subjects of general interest and the general indexes bring out much material of interest to the specialist. For illustration of this fact, the headings Architecture, Immigration and Prices may be traced thru the sample pages included in this pamphlet.

This edition of the pamphlet is sent out in the hope that it will be useful and that those who use it for instruction will not hesitate to make suggestions whereby future editions may be made more helpful in class-room work.

THE CATALOGING AND INDEXING SERVICE OF THE H. W. WILSON COMPANY

Once the librarian of today has entered upon his new duties, he is confronted immediately by a number of problems. First, there is the question what the library shall contain, what reference tools, dictionaries, encyclopedias, etc., are essential, what the proportion of fiction to books of other classes shall be, measured by the needs of the community or institution, the resources and location of other libraries in the community or other libraries to which access may be had, and the purpose of the library, whether purely for reference use or for entertainment and instruction.

Then there are the questions of how the material is to be secured and made ready for use and circulation. Problems of selection and purchase, cataloging, circulation and reference immediately arise. The librarian is troubled by the difficulty of choosing from the vast amount of material available that most suitable for his needs, and by the fear that the material he wants most will escape his attention.

The extent of the problem can be appreciated when one considers how much the presses are continually turning out in this day and age. Once books were few in number and were mainly for the recreation and enjoyment of those inclined toward literary pursuits. No one thought of using them as a help in daily life. Now books are published in the United States alone to the tune of 8,000 or 10,000 a year, on every subject under the sun. Periodicals, once issued in limited numbers for literary enjoyment, have become the vehicle whereby thousands of learned societies, universities, organizations and movements pour forth to the world the results of their investigations. Pamphlets, documents, reports and bulletins are issued by government and state departments, banks, railways, movements and learned bodies on every conceivable subject. The great bulk of published matter is issued today, not primarily as literature, but for information and as a record of progress, and it has become a most essential working tool to any man engaged in adding to human achievement in any direction.

With this mass of material, the worker in any field must necessarily limit himself to the literature of that field, and not too much of his time and energy must be devoted to

ACCOUNTING AND SALES OFFICES

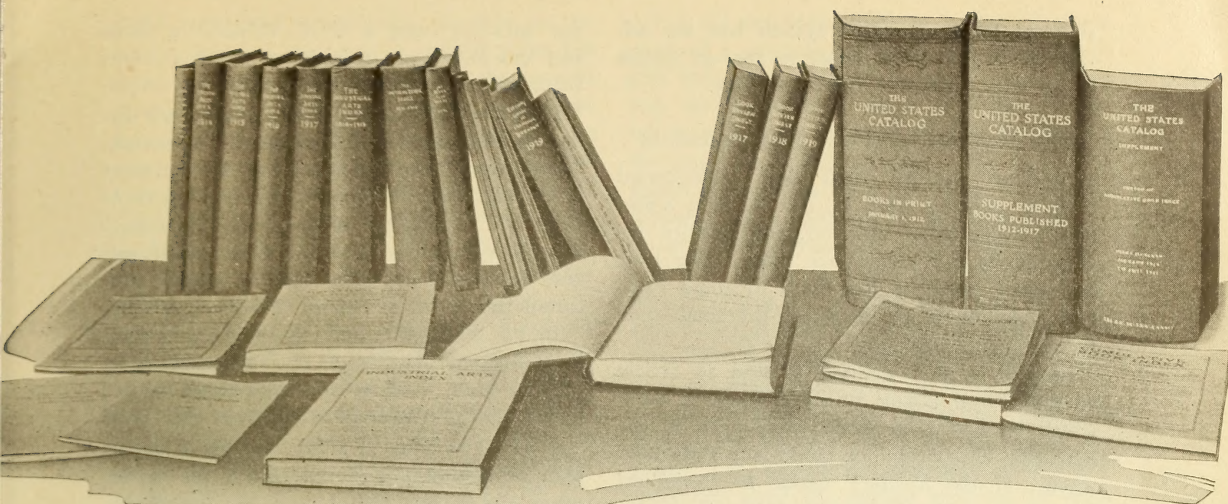

The H. W. Wilson Company's service answers the questions "What is there" and "Where can I find it," by cataloging in alphabetic arrangement, by subjects, the contents of American books as they are published, including pamphlets, documents, reports and importations, and the contents of nearly 500 periodicals. The service had its beginning more than twenty years ago in the Cumulative Book Index, a record of current books, which Mr. H. W. Wilson, the President of the firm, then the proprietor of a small college bookstore in the Middle West, began in a small way, to meet the needs made evident to him by his own experience. The publisher and his wife did the compiling at home after hours, and the first issue, a modest pamphlet of sixteen pages, was delivered to twenty-seven subscribers. Next an editor was em-

Another service that has grown out of the need of libraries for more specific aid in the selecting of books is the Book Review Digest. Here the more important of the new books are evaluated. This is done in a scientific manner by including first a brief description of the contents and purpose of the book, free from criticism or bias, and, then excerpts from published reviews of the book, both favorable and unfavorable. This provides a consensus of opinion that presents all points of view and is free from personal bias. Nearly seventy journals are clipped regularly for the reviews they contain, thereby insuring a wide range of opinion. A similar service is now performed for the very

THE INDEXING OF PERIODICALS

Naturally the library will contain the periodicals most vital to its clientele, some copies to circulate and perhaps to be clipped, others for reference. These must be indexed in some way to make the information they contain available when wanted. There are other periodicals less vital to the particular institution or community, but important enough to subscribe for at least one copy for reference, and still others not needed badly enough to subscribe for, but which publish articles from time to time that those who use the library would value if they knew of them. The periodical indexing service of The H. W. Wilson Company brings to a focus all the information on any subject whatsoever contained in the five hundred and more periodicals it indexes. About 190,000 separate articles in 8,000 separate issues of these journals are recorded in the service for a single year. A single number of the Readers' Guide alone records about 4,500 entries to approximately 140 issues of the 104 periodicals indexed regularly.

These services save the library from the necessity of card-indexing the contents of the periodicals it subscribes for, and reveal at a glance articles in other periodicals that would be of service. There are now four services including the Readers' Guide to Periodical Literature for periodicals popular and general in character, the International Index to Periodicals for educational, religious, scholarly or purely scientific journals, many of them international in character, the Agricultural Index for periodicals, pamphlets, bulletins, documents and reports on all phases of agriculture, and the Industrial Arts Index where are recorded regularly the contents of 153 periodicals, in addition to many bulletins and reports, on business, trade, electricity, chemistry, engineering, textiles, manufactures, mining and metallurgy, and applied science.

All the articles in these periodicals are indexed under as many subject headings as the contents call for (in the Guide and International Index under the author also), and each entry contains the title and author of the article, maps, plates and illustrations, if any, the name and volume number of the magazine in which the article appears, inclusive paging and date. With one exception, these services are issued monthly, thereby keeping the record well up-to-date, and the annual and cumulated volumes provide a similar record for the files for earlier years in convenient form.

The distinctive features of these cataloging and indexing services are (1) the simple alphabetic arrangement of subject headings; (2) frequent cumulation, which saves the time of the user and provides for periodic revision of the whole, and (3) the service basis method of charge.

For the average user of an index who wants to find out what has been published on the particular subject he is investigating, the alphabetic arrangement of subject headings has proved most satisfactory. Forms of headings are studied carefully to choose those conforming most closely to current practice, and, to prevent going astray, cross-references are used freely. These also serve to direct the user to material in fields allied to the particular subject he is studying, and so open up new and perhaps unthought of, fields for investigation. Headings are often inverted and subheadings used to bring material on allied subjects together. This system has the advantage in that it is simple to use—as simple as an encyclopaedia or a dictionary.

THE CUMULATIVE PLAN OF PUBLICATION

Another feature that has contributed towards making The H. W. Wilson Company's Cataloging and Indexing Service invaluable, is the cumulative plan. The time and labor saved to the users of these catalogs and indexes by means of the cumulative feature is incalculable.

Imagine a man wanting to find an article on the "Physiological Effect of Leaking Gas" which he had seen some years back in the Scientific American but could not remember when. If the Readers' Guide to Periodical Literature or the Industrial Arts Index were not cumulated he would have to look through each monthly issue for each year approxi-for 1912-1917 and a third volume; a three and one-half year cumulation, covers books from January, 1918 to June 30, 1921. The current record, the Cumulative Book Index, is also cumulated from month to month, from July thru to February with single issues in October and December and from March to June with a single issue in April. The June number for each year is a bound annual volume replaced every third year by a three-year cumulation with all entries in one alphabet.

In the Readers' Guide the monthly service is cumulated also, with full cumulations in March, May, August and November and a bound annual volume at the close of each year.

A few years ago a study was made of the plan of cumulation of the record for earlier years and it was found by actual calculation that, from the standpoint of the number of alphabets to be used, in the long run the threeimating the date he remembered until he found the article. In this case it might mean looking through some fifty issues or more. The cumulative plan makes it unnecessary for him to look thru more than two issues for the current year and one issue for each year previous, or series of years.

By this cumulative plan, the United States Catalog contains a record complete in one alphabet for books in print up to January 1, 1912. Another volume contains the record year cumulation was the most practical. Accordingly, the three-year period has been adopted for all the Wilson indexes with the exception of the International Index to Periodicals where the nature of the material makes a four-year cumulation seem more practical, and of the Industrial Arts Index, where the fact that the articles soon go out of date, makes a two-year cumulation seem of more value.

It was also the custom in the past, to issue these cumulated volumes in addition to the current service, charging a special price for them. They are now included in the current service at no additional charge, the large cumulations being delivered in place of the annual volume for the year of issue. By this arrangement the subscriber to the Readers' Guide receives for two years an annual volume and the third year, a three-year cumulation in one alphabet, covering the current year and the two previous years.

For a period of five years then there are but four alphabets to consult at the most at any time, as against the forty to fifty alphabets that would be necessary if the Readers' Guide were not cumulated at all. This reduces the time and labor of the user proportionally.

CUMULATIVE SERVICE FOR 1921

Under the cumulative plan, in 1921 appeared four large cumulations of this cataloging and indexing service. The three-and-one-half-year cumulation of the United States Catalog covered in one alphabet, books published from January 1, 1918 to June 30, 1921. It was delivered to subscribers to the Cumulative Book Index in place of the annual volume which would otherwise have been published. A two-year volume, 1920-1921, was delivered to subscribers to the Industrial Arts Index, and there were also a three-year cumulation of the Readers' Guide, 1919-1921, and a three-year cumulation of the Agricultural Index, 1919-1921, all of which were delivered to subscribers in place of the annual volume for the year, and at no additional charge.

A BRIEF DESCRIPTION OF PROCESSES

Users of the indexes may be interested in some of the processes involved in their preparation.

Subject headings are assigned by an actual examination of the books and periodicals themselves whenever possible. For every book recorded in the United States Catalog a 4x6 card is made to which are fastened clippings from publishers catalogs and announcements, book lists, etc., concerning the book. Subject headings are assigned from an examination of the book itself or where this is not possible, from the data given on the card, supplemented by information solicited from the publishers. There are now assembled in the editorial office of the Company about 250,000 of these cards, the preparation of which has cost the Firm $100,000 or more.

For the periodical indexes a copy of every issue of a magazine, bulletin, pamphlet or report indexed is received, read by the indexer and the headings to be used written in on the margin near the title of each article and the copy filed for reference. It has been found essential to have the actual periodicals available for indexing, in the first place to be sure of assigning the proper subject-headings for titles are often misleading and do not represent the subject accurately or provide sufficient data for indexing. Then, when cumulations occur and many articles are brought under one heading, it is often necessary to provide sub-headings. For this reason the articles must be frequently re-read. The periodicals are kept on file for reference until the entries referring to them are recorded in the final cumulated volume to be issued for the period.

After a periodical has been read and the subject headings assigned, the magazine is taken by a typist and the entries to be made are typed on sheets of paper, five by twelve inches, divided by lines into four spaces of equal size. One entry is written in each space, as cut "F" will show. After the typed entries have been compared with the magazine for accuracy, the sheets for a month's indexing work are collected, and cut apart on the ruled lines. The result is a card catalog, each card a 3 x 5 slip of copy, containing a single entry. These are then alphabetized in the order they are to appear in the printed index, and sent to the printing department to be set up on the linotype.

HOW THE CUMULATING IS DONE

Naturally the plan of cumulation used in the Wilson Indexes would be so cumbersome from one to four slugs each, and after an issue of the service is printed, these slugs are stored in alphabetical order on long galleys.

Previous to this, after the entries have been set, a proof is cut up and the portion of the proof showing the slugs for any one entry is pasted to the copy slip for that entry. This makes a card catalog that serves both for the purpose of comparison in case an error has been made in typesetting, and as an actual catalog of the slugs themselves. This card catalog is preserved in the editorial department and is capable of any amount of enlargement or rearrangement.

When a cumulated number is to be issued, the new matter for the month is sent to the printer, set up and the new slugs then alphabetized with the slugs for the former number.

some and expensive as to be practically impossible, if some convenient way were not found of preserving the entries in type and arranging them in as many combinations as desired. Just as the library records the contents of its collection by means of the card catalog, so does The H. W. Wilson Company have a catalog for the entries to the periodicals and books which it records. This consists in the editorial department, of the card catalog previously mentioned, and in the manufacturing department of linotype slugs.

The entries as set up by the linotyper averagers of which the cumulation is to be made. The card catalog in the editorial room, made from the copy slips, is arranged to show the entries which the cumulation is to contain and in what order, and is forwarded to the printing department to serve as a guide in combining the slugs. Proof is afterward taken of the combined type and read with the cards to make sure all slugs are in their proper places and that none are missing, also to make such combinations of entries as may be desirable in the case of continued articles, etc. The illustration below shows a combining table with the worker in the process of combining the old and new linotype slugs. The tray of slugs from a former number is arranged on one side, the tray of new slugs on the other, while the central tray contains the combined type-matter. The copy slips indi-price to all results in cutting off many who if allowed to share according to ability, could benefit by the service and help materially to reduce the cost to larger institutions. A graduated scale of charge has been adopted therefore that will bring these catalogs and incate the order in which the entries are to be compiled, and the racks around and behind the table contain other slugs ready for combination.

THE SERVICE BASIS METHOD OF CHARGE

While, for the sake of convenience, these catalogs and indexes are printed and distributed as periodicals, they perform a service for the library, which if done by itself for itself, can only be measured in the salary cost of a cataloger, and the cost of files, cards, storage space and corresponding overhead charges. The fact that this service is done at a central bureau for all libraries permits each library to obtain it at a fraction of what it would cost to do the work for itself.

Again the small library does not make the same use of the service that the large institution does and to attempt to charge the same dexes within the reach of even the smallest library. The cost of service is measured as accurately as possible by the amount of use each institution makes of it. In the case of the book catalogs it is determined by the amount spent annually for books and for the periodical indexing services, by the number of periodicals indexed that the library receives.

BACK NUMBERS OF MAGAZINES

The average library does not have the space to keep a large stock of back numbers of magazines and the library that is supplied with indexes to periodicals does not need to store them. The H. W. Wilson Company can supply in full sets, volumes or single numbers, practically all the periodicals that are indexed and many others.

In addition to the cataloging and indexing service. The H. W. Wilson Company is the publisher of many bibliographies and books intended for reference and research work including a number of books on business subjects. A complete catalog of publications will be sent on request.

Since many periodicals, especially foreign ones and those issued infrequently and irregularly, are delayed in receipt, the term "period covered" is necessarily only approximate. Also, it is impossible to print the various indexes simultaneously and therefore the indexing of periodicals must be cut off earlier for some indexes than for others. In order that users of the indexes may know approximately what is included in each issue, the date to which the indexing of periodicals received has been done, is indicated on the first page of the alphabet. In some of the annual volumes the indexing stops one or two months before the end of the year and, in other cases, it includes some periodicals for the following year.

No new entries are included in the large cumulations so users may know that they have all indexing in hand in the current issues, and that the necessary delay in receipt of bound volumes means only the temporary inconvenience of using two or more alphabets.

THE BOOK REVIEW DIGEST is published monthly and is cumulated twice a year, for six months in August, with a bound annual volume in February. The other issues are current only, with the exception of the title index which cumulates from March to August, and again from September to February.

THE LEGAL INDEX is issued quarterly, in April, July, October and January, with a cumulation of the indexing once a year, in January. The Law Library Journal does not cumulate, but title page and index are furnished with the January number.

THE STANDARD CATALOG BIMONTHLY is issued in January, March, May, July, September and November, each covering a period of two months except the July number which is an annual cumulation.

THE CUMULATIVE BOOK INDEX

The Cumulative Book Index is a current up-to-date catalog of American books and importations as they are published. All books are cataloged by author and title and under as many subjects as the contents demand. All entries are in one alphabet and include author, title, price, publisher, binding, date of publication and the Library of Congress card order number. Subheadings and cross-references add greatly to the value of the indexing. All books, pamphlets, etc., are included, those issued by authors, printers, societies and institutions, subscription books and books printed privately as well as the books of established publishing houses.

The Cumulative Book Index is published monthly with the exception of August, and cumulated successively from July thru to February, with single issues in October and December, and again from March to June with a single issue in April. A bound annual volume is published in June, which is replaced every third year by a three-year cumulation, all supplied on the regular subscription.

The Cumulative Book Index is the current supplement to

NOTES

THE BOOK REVIEW DIGEST

The main purpose of the Book Review Digest is to evaluate the new books in order to assist the librarians in their selection and purchase. About two hundred new books are recorded each month, covering all classes. The basis of selection of books for recording is determined largely by the reviews received and for this purpose, two copies of about sixty literary and class publications reviewing books regularly, are received, the reviews cut and pasted on folders, one folder to a book.

Each book is entered by author and the title, price, publisher, classification number and the Library of Congress card order number are given, also pages and subject headings which are new features beginning with March, 1922. This information is followed by a descriptive note written if possible on examination of the book itself, or if not possible, from such impartial information as is at hand. These notes are purely descriptive, setting forth the scope and purpose of the book, free from editorial comment.

Following the descriptive note for each book, are excerpts from the various reviews received, chosen to reflect as many points of view as possible. The reviews are indexed, the number of words is given for each and the trend of each review, whether favorable or unfavorable, is noted by plus and minus signs.

Following the regular alphabet, as shown in the last of the sample pages, is an author, subject and pseudonym index (see particularly the Index to Fiction), a list of "Documents for use in the smaller libraries," and a "Quarterly list of new technical and industrial books" (included quarterly only). The Digest is published monthly and cumulated for six months in August, with a bound annual cumulation in February. The title-index is cumulated successively thru each issue from March to August and from September to February.

"It may be that some of its propositions are more ingenious than practicable, though it would not be easy to point them out. It may be that the writer is over-hopeful of the success of some of his plans, though he maintains generally an admirable tone of moderation. It is certain that he has, in a broad and patriotic spirit, presented most lucidly what he esteems to be the lesson of one of the greatest administrative achievements in the history of our government."

CROWELL, JOSHUA FREEMAN. Outdoors and in. *$1.50 Four seas co. 811 20-5146

Nature themes predominate in this volume of poems and not the least attractive of them are those inspired by the cultivated garden flowers. There are a few poems of social interest, including those which touch on the war. An occasional vein of satire is also disclosed. The verses are grouped under the following heads: Through the year; Along the way; Above the clouds; From sea and shore; By wood and stream; Of field and town; To tone and tune; Garden wise; An interlude; Dream wise.

"Skilled though he be in verse forms, Mr Crowell is nevertheless far from being a poet, and no discriminating reader will ever suspect him of it."

+ Cath World 111:838 S '20 100w

CROWTHER, SAMUEL. Common sense and labour. *$2 (3½c) Doubleday 331 20-7435

In attempting to put his finger on the something wrong in the industrial world of today, in the relations between employer and employee, the writer does not find any intrinsic antagonism between capital and labor. On the contrary he believes that "there is a growing conception that capital and labor are complementary, that it is perfectly possible to effect a bargain and sale with a reasonable profit to both sides and without more than a natural amount of bickering." He has little use for any of the revolutionary changes involved in "profit-sharing," the "democratization of industry" and the like, but thinks that constructive results can be achieved when "capital and labor meet not as partners but as persons anxious to make all that they can out of the same general opportunity." Contents: The fundamental causes of labour unrest; The relation between the employer and the employed; The worker and his wage; Wages and profit-sharing delusions; The fetish of industrial democracy; When they get together; The economic truths of work; The man and the machine; The methods and policies of British labour.

"The many cases cited give it a lively interest for the average, concerned business man or worker."

CROWTHER, SAMUEL. Why men strike. *$1.75 (3c) Doubleday 331.1 20-8812

The author's contention is that men are now no longer striking for higher wages or shorter hours, as formerly, but are striking against work, i.e. against what they think is an unjust system of society. He has no fault to find with capital, as such, but thinks its present mode of distribution could be improved upon. To that end he advocates a new kind of thrift, that is not based primarily on self-denial but rather on wise spending. By affording opportunities for investment of savings, thus returning them to production, he would give the workers a stake in society, create a nation of capitalists and appease social unrest.

CROY, HOMER. Turkey Bowman. il *$1.75 (2½c) Harper 20-16795

Like the author's novel "Boone Stop" this is a story of boy life in the West. But it pictures a somewhat earlier period when the Indians were not yet subdued and when Indian uprisings were to be feared. The young hero, Turkey Bowman, jilted by the girl he has fallen in love with, runs away from home in company with a somewhat older vagabond who shares his opinion of the sex. Slim too has a broken heart and the two are drawn together in misery. They have various wandering adventures and settle down for a time on a cattle ranch. Slim eventually changes his attitude toward women and Turkey carries news of a proposed Indian raid to the army post and returns home a hero.

"Turkey is always amusing, and he is a very human boy."

CROZIER, WILLIAM. Ordnance and the world war. *$2.50 (3c) Scribner 940.373 20-8902

A book subtitled "a contribution to the history of American preparedness." The author's purpose is to describe the ordnance department and to trace the various steps in equipping the army for France, leaving the reader to judge to what extent the department met its responsibilities. Contents: Ordnance department; Embarrassments; Overhead organization; Criticisms; Rifles; Machine guns; Field artillery; Smokeless powder; Responsibility; Conclusion. The author states that since he is no longer a member of the war department he speaks "without official authority, and with something of the freedom of any other citizen."

"So far as the book is an apology for the Ordnance department, it is well done and is successful. So far as it is an apology for the writer himself, it had better have been left undone. It doth protest too much; it leaves the reader not quite convinced; worse, far worse, it leaves him bored." H: W. Bunn

MURDOCK, VICTOR. China, the mysterious and marvellous. il *$2.50 Revell 915.1 20-20219

"Mr Murdock's book is simply a narrative of a trip into China that took him rather far into the interior and away from the usual route of the tourist." (Freeman) "He says, 'Here is the history of the present volume. My brother in Wichita took the letters I had written and as they had been published in our paper, the Eagle, put them in the form they bear. Our idea was to let me give copies of it to particular friends.'" (N Y Times)

"It is unfortunate, we think that Mr Murdock elected to write this story of his travels, not in English, but in journalese. Some three hundred pages of etymological 'jazz' places an undue strain on the reader's literary nerves. And this is more the pity because the author can command good, plain English when he wants to." MURRAY, ELSIE RIAEH, and SMITH, HENRIETTA BROWN. Child under eight. (Modern educator's lib.) *$1.90 (*6s) Longmans 372.2 (Eng ed E20-581)

"The book which comes from England with this title, 'The child under eight,' is a discussion of the kindergarten after the fashion that might have been found in an American book fifteen or twenty years ago. The titles of the various chapters indicate the temper of the writers. There are chapters entitled 'The world's mine oyster. All the world's a stage. Joy in making. In grassy places, etc. The book is not without some practical suggestions for work in the kindergarten, but in the main it is a defense of the kindergarten with some reference to modern movements in the treatment of little children.'—El School J

MURRAY, GILBERT. Our great war and the great war of the ancient Greeks. (Creighton lecture, 1918) *$1.25 (13c) Seltzer 938 20-13139

A comparison between the Peloponnesian war and the great war in Europe. The war between Sparta and Athens was the greatest war the world had ever known. "Arising suddenly among civilized nations, accustomed to comparatively decent and half-hearted wars, it startled the world by its uncompromising ferocity." And it ended in a peace that was no peace and was followed by other wars, the outcome of which was death to both combatants. Drawing on the historians and dramatists of the time the author sets forth a picture that shows many striking similarities to our modern experience. In conclusion he expresses a hope that in spite of the terrible evils growing out of the recent war, we may make use of the opportunity to build a better international life out of the ruin. The work is dated November 7, 1918.

MURRAY, JOHN. John Murray III, 1808-1892. 2 il *$1.50 Knopf (Eng ed 20-8871)

"John Murray III was the grandson of the John Murray (1745-93, originally MacMurray!) who founded the famous publishing house in November, 1768, and the son of John Murray, jr. (1778-1843), who is perhaps best remembered now as friend and publisher of Byron and as publisher of the Quarterly Review. Of John Murray III (1808-92) there was no account adequate at all, except mere facts in the Dictionary of national biography, until his son's interesting article appeared in the Quarterly Review for January, 1919. The present little book consists of that article, revised and enlarged, followed by the father's paper on the 'Origin and history of Murray's handbooks for travellers,' and by some new letters to his family (1830-91), mainly describing vividly various travels abroad and at home."—N Y Evening Post

O'RIORDAN, CONAL O'CONNELL (NORREYS CONNELL, pseud.). Adam of Dublin. *$2
Harcourt 20-20003

Adam was born in the gutter and began his career in life, at the age of seven, selling stale papers. When he came to a sudden realization of what that meant he went to pour out his heart in confession to Father Innocent Feeley and found his first and truest friend. He makes other friends too, for after Father Innocent's intervention has secured for him an education for the priesthood, and after the good Father's death occurred at a crisis in Adam's school life that made his position there untenable, the queer old Frenchman in Adam's lodging house, who was not a Frenchman at all but a German musician, took him under his wing and saw to it that he was freed from the clutches of the Jesuits. The book leaves young Adam—the incarnation of the romantic soul of Ireland—on the brink of a new and freer life, of which the reader is led to expect an account in another volume.

NOTES

STANDARD CATALOG BIMONTHLY

When the publishers undertook the Standard Catalog the plans embraced, among other features, a catalog of 10,000 titles, to be issued first in classified sections and later assembled into a dictionary catalog; an abridged edition, covering about 4000 titles, for the smaller libraries; and frequent supplements to the Catalog to inform librarians promptly of the titles to be included in future editions and to enable them to buy books that would appear permanently in the printed catalog. The lack of a tool in book selection adequately adapted to the very small library made it seem advisable to undertake the last of these three plans at once, and accordingly the Standard Catalog Bimonthly was begun in November, 1921.

Since the Bimonthly is intended for libraries unable to purchase to exceed two hundred books annually, it has been decided to publish six times a year, each issue covering about fifty of the new books. The publication will appear in September, November, January, March, May and July, with the annual cumulation in July, containing about 300 books. The first annual number to appear in July, 1922, will include about 450 titles and will cover a year and a half, since the November 1921 issue contained 170 books for 1921.

The books are selected from the Book Review Digest with the assistance of many library commissions and library workers who have agreed to serve as cooperators. The entries, including the author, title, pages, price, publisher, classification number, subject headings, L. C. card order number, descriptive note and excerpts from reviews, appear as in the Digest except that the books are arranged by classes. An author, title and subject index is added and cumulated fully in each issue. There is also a list of the public documents suitable for the very small library, and a directory of publishers.

Sociology, Rural, Agriculture, Cooperative. Country life. Community centers

"The work presented here is the result of the author's experience in rural organization in local communities, first as a local leader and later as a rural organization specialist on the federal and state cooperative basis. As a part of that experience the author made a careful study of many types of rural work throughout the United States, and has kept in touch, in so far as possible, with rural development abroad. His purpose has been to secure the best for those communities for which he has felt a special responsibility." (Preface) Part one outlines the general principles, organizations, and institutions of the rural community. Part two considers the economic functions—farm production, marketing, securing supplies, finance, communication and transportation. Part three treats of the social functions—education, sanitation and health, recreation, beautification and home-making. Questions and research problems are added to each chapter.

Making due allowance for the individual solution of individual problems, the author attempts to show how a successful family budget can be made to cover the essentials of living—shelter, food, clothing, operating and development, and also provide for savings. She explains the standards for these six essentials as determined by income. Sample proportions and percentages are given for various budgets and colored graphic circles are provided in illustration. There is one chapter each on the individual income, the child's income, and the student's income and the final chapter gives suggestive questions for discussion.

This collection of essays is the first volume of selections from the Literary Review of the New York Evening Post. The essays, which are brief and pointed, are on literature, especially the novel, on readers, and on reviewing. In each essay a definite point is made, with directness and evident sincerity.

"These essays are too short. On the first page of this 'Review,' where they were originally printed, they struck the bottom of the column with a bump and recoiled into a conclusion which still seems too abrupt as we re-read them. So few ideas can really be expounded in 800 words! The ideas themselves . . . still seem valid, which in an age of rapid transition is a test, and there is a familiar warmth in them which even the cold correctness of book print cannot chill."

TUMULTY, JOSEPH PATRICK. Woodrow Wilson as I know him. il $5 Doubleday B or 92 21-21613

Wilson, Woodrow, 1856-

The author has observed Mr Wilson at close range for eleven years, from the time of his first appearance in politics as candidate for governor of New Jersey, having been his private secretary from the beginning of his governorship to the end of his presidency. The nature of the material in his book—private correspondence, notes which passed between the president and his secretary on matters of policy, presidential soliloquies on great issues and conversations of which the secretary kept careful notes, give the book historic purpose and value. The author touches upon all the important points in the history of Mr Wilson's administration and searches the controversies which have raged about his public life and personal relationships. The appendix contains the cablegrams which passed between president and secretary during the Paris conference. The book is indexed.

"Even admitting all that may be, and has been, said concerning Mr Tumulty's lapses from the highest skill and taste, granting also that he appears in this narrative as a special pleader,—in the very nature of the case how could he be anything else?—the book is a document which will serve a valuable historic purpose. One thing that it makes clear is that, quite apart from the immediate results of important decisions which Mr Wilson was called upon to make, he has cared far more for the opinion of posterity than of his contemporaries." "Mr Tumulty has written a good book. It does not please Mr Wilson's too ardent lovers, nor does it please Mr Wilson's too ardent haters. The former find too much Tumulty in it, the latter too real a Wilson." R. D. W. C.

+ Greensboro [N. C.] Daily News p6 Ja 22 '22 950w

"Amusingly prominent as the author makes himself throughout the book, it is nevertheless perfectly evident that his animating purpose throughout is that of exalting not himself but his master. . . . The book contains not much that is essentially new; but it brings back to mind instances of great achievement which in the heat of controversy have been forgotten by many."

+ — Ind 108:16 Ja 7 '22 1700w

"To the followers of Mr Wilson, this intimate statement of inside happenings will come as a vindication of a misunderstood man; to the enemies of Mr Wilson, there will be nothing in the pages but a grotesque imitation of a lesser Boswell. But on whatever side of the fence you are, you will be compelled to learn much of the character of Mr Wilson which will dispel the many myths as to his strong-headed unwillingness to accept advice or to consult authority. This story of Woodrow Wilson may be taken as authentic stuff of inside White-House problems during a trying administration."

+ Lit D p36 D 24 '21 260w

"Admitting that his book brings little new political material to light, and that his quotations must be scrutinized critically, Mr Tumulty, has thrown valuable light on Wilson's personality. He marshals irrefutable evidence to show that in the circle of his personal intimates Wilson was genial, kindly, glad of advice, willing to accept criticism, if his interlocutor dared, like Tumulty, to criticize." C: Seymour

+ — Lit R p349 Ja 14 '22 1350w

"In spite of intrusive egoism Mr Tumulty's book is of great value." D: S. Muzzey

+ — Nation 114:73 Ja 18 '22 1150w

"Mr Tumulty has disappointed the critics. His book has been received not only with great cordiality, but with enthusiastic approbation, and, better than all, with a storm of discussion. 'Woodrow Wilson as I know him' is a strong aid to the understanding of the psychology of an ex-President whose apotheosis, in the minds of many of his admirers, would seem not far distant." M. F. Egan

ANTHONY, JOSEPH. Gang. $1.90 (5c) Holt 21-20268

"The scene is Harlem, on the upper east side, and the people are the inhabitants of a block—men, women and children, of whom most of the elders relapse in their conversation now and then into Yiddish and use their English with amusing awkwardness, while the school-taught English of the children is richly flavored with east side idiom. The Diamond family is chief among the characters, and among them Harold, the twelve-year-old son, is especially prominent."—N Y Times

"Mr Anthony's visual and olfactory senses are perhaps too acute for squeamish readers, but his effects are powerfully achieved, and his humor is a triumph of selective dialogue." Burton Rascoe

+ Bookm 54:480 Ja '22 150w

"He is a very real, very life-like boy, evidencing anew Mr Anthony's power as a novelist. There is running through the book a gentle but strong sense of humor. 'The Gang' proves Mr Anthony's genuine ability in no uncertain manner. It is a delightful book." D. L. M.

+ Boston Transcript p6 D 17 '21 800w

"The effect of the whole, with its understanding, its convincing portrayal and its pervasive humor, is to inspire the reader with a warmer sympathy for the kind of people of whom he writes and a clearer, more kindly appreciation of their qualities. And that is an unusual result for a realistic writer to achieve."

EVARTS, HAL GEORGE. Bald face; and other animal stories. il $3 (4c) Knopf 21-20536

Logo is a grizzly bear whose imaginary life history, based on much intimate knowledge of wild life, the author relates. He shows us how much of an animal's instinctive knowledge is a matter of experience and how Logo acquired his. The reflections on human nature that crop up in these studies of animal life illustrate the similarity of the basic instincts

NOTES

THE READERS' GUIDE TO PERIODICAL LITERATURE

Indexes the contents of 101 current periodicals popular in public and school libraries, by author and subject, with occasional title-entries for fiction. All entries are in one alphabet, dictionary form, and sub-headings and cross-references are used frequently to help the searcher in finding the particular material wanted.

Each entry contains the title of the article, authors' name, name of periodical containing the article (abbreviated), volume number, inclusive paging and date. "Il," "map," "por," etc., are used when the article is illustrated or is accompanied by maps or portraits.

The Guide is published monthly except July. It is cumulated for the year to date of issue, in February, March, May, August and December. Other numbers are cumulated also so that it is not necessary to use more than two alphabets at any time for the record of the year to date. The December number is a bound annual volume, replaced every third year by a three-year cumulation in one alphabet, all supplied on the annual subscription. See page 10 for schedule of cumulation.

The Series now contains Vol. I, 1900-1904 (out of print); Vol. II, 1905-1909; Vol. III, 1910-1914, Vol. IV, 1915-1918, and Vol. V, 1919-1921.

¹ These three pages are taken from the annual cumulation for 1920. A comparison of these four pages with those chosen to illustrate the other indexes show that often the same subject is covered in several of the indexes, i.e., references to Architecture will be found also in the Cumulative Book Index, International Index, and the Agricultural Index also references to Architects in the Industrial Arts Index.

INTERNATIONAL INDEX TO PERIODICALS

(FORMERLY READERS' GUIDE SUPPLEMENT)

This index was begun in 1913, as a supplement to the Readers' Guide, partly to fill the place left vacant by Poole's Index, and partly to index periodicals too scholarly for the small public and school library, but valuable to the large public and college library. From thirty-six magazines indexed in the first issue, the number of periodicals indexed has grown to 194, including 92 published outside of the United States and possessions, and 71 in some language other than English. Some of these are the serials, formerly indexed by the A. L. A. on cards, and incorporated in the International Index in 1919.

The form of indexing is the same as that used in the Readers' Guide, a description of which will be found on page 11. The International Index is published five times a year and cumulated as shown in the table on page 10. The bound annual cumulation is published in January of each year for the preceding year, and is replaced every fourth year by a four-year cumulation, all included in the year's subscription.

The first volume of the Series, 1907-1915 carries the indexing back to supplement the last volume of Poole's Index (1902-1906) and volume 2 covers the years 1916-1919 in one alphabet. Volume 3 will cover the years 1920-1923.

¹ These three pages were taken from the annual cumulation for 1920. A comparison of these pages with those chosen to illustrate the other indexes shows that often the same subject is covered in several of the indexes, i.e., references to Architecture will be found also in the Cumulative Book Index, Readers' Guide, Agricultural Index, also references to Architects in the Industrial Arts Index.

THE AGRICULTURAL INDEX

The Agricultural Index is the Readers' Guide to publications in the agricultural field. Besides the 128 periodicals indexed regularly, there are indexed as they appear, pamphlets, bulletins, documents and reports issued by agricultural agencies such as the International Institute of Agriculture, World Agricultural Society, international cooperative societies, U. S. Department of Agriculture, Foreign agricultural departments, regional and national associations, State departments of agriculture, experiment stations, agricultural societies, colleges, extension departments, state marketing and farm bureaus, and business organizations with farming interests such as chambers of commerce, railroads, banks, etc. Twenty countries are represented in addition to the United States; making the Agricultural Index largely international in character. Much of this miscellaneous material can be had by the library at little or no cost.

Articles are indexed by subject, all entries arranged alphabetically in dictionary form and sub-headings and cross-references are used freely. Each number contains a checklist of the occasional material (individual pamphlets or material received irregularly) indexed in that number, and a book review section for the most important agricultural books. Other books not reviewed are listed in the Index by author.

The Agricultural Index is issued 10 times a year, cumulated fully in February, March, April, June and September, with a two-months cumulation in November and the annual volume in January (see schedule on page 10). Three-year cumulations replace the annual volume every third year. The first of these covers the period 1916-1918; the second, 1919-1921.

THE INDUSTRIAL ARTS INDEX

A subject index to 145 engineering, trade, and business periodicals, 26 of which are published outside of the United States. All entries are in one alphabet and sub-headings and cross-references are utilized as in the Readers' Guide. The content of entries is the same as in the Readers' Guide and other indexes. In addition to the index, each number contains a list of the more important new technical books, also a list of technical societies with addresses.

The Industrial Arts Index is published ten times a year, and cumulated fully in February, March, May, July and December, with an annual cumulation in December (see schedule on page 10), and a two-year cumulation every second year. Other numbers are cumulated so it is not necessary to use more than two issues at any time for the year's record to date. Annuals and cumulations are supplied to users of the service on the regular subscription.

The Index began publication in 1913 and annual cumulations can be supplied for the years 1913-1917. The first two-year volume covered the years 1918-1919 and the second, 1920-1921.
